It Is the Truest Test.

Whene'er a man selects a wife,
ile hoje sto walk vith her thro' life;
yo we can very plainly see
That they in age quite near should be—
And many think it a sood plan
That the wife be younger than the man.
For, as the years roll swiftly on we find the wife we look upon
Hhomes plainer each succeding year.
That ions the one she loves so dear.
The trials and the numerous cares
That uncomplaintingly she bears.
And wrinkles sconcet find a place
Upon her urow and in her face.
Time is not measured all by years.
And those whose how our saidoin clears
Are old when they reach twenty-five while some, if they are still alive.
Seem young to us at eighty-one.
Has help ed some other one to cheer.
We always love to have thom near;
And so we think the truest test.
Is to take the one we love the beat.

With that view I disagree. I hold that he who truly loves with be load to condemn the object of his affections to misery by asking her to live in poverty with him for life.

It is immaterial what the respective ages of the contracting parties may be if true love exists; but I should say a difference of a few years in the woman's favor would be desirable. But a man should beware of marriage unless he is capable.

Let me say age has everything to do a novice of five minutes ten seconds. with our happiness. It stands to reason that a man of forty will not think the same as a younger man. He has passed through the best part of life. If he marthrough the best part of life. If he mar-ries a woman of twenty he might love and worship her, but all the same he has great ideas of his superiority. Later on he may debur her from pleasures, simply because he has no interest in social life, and, in his selfish habits, will forget how egotistical he appears, and then incom-patibility is the result.

No, from a bitter experience I can say a man should be five, never more than ten, years ahead of his wife. Then their interests are balanced, their nutual at.

Why There Can Be No Rules.

The question as to what the proper relative ages of man and wife should be at marriage I do not believe can be answered with any degree of accuracy whatever. It appears to depend upon whatever. It appears to depend upon circumstances and conditions of things generally. Therefore, no set rule can be not do less than offer his seat, which the

to enter into marriage, but they differ greatly as to how old a man she should marry.

In my opinion a man must have a certain amount of experience before he can become an ideal husband, and this experience can only be gained by marriage liself and in no other way. Provided a man toves his wife, to begin with the longer he is married the better husband he will become, and the highest degree of hamminess is only known to those who pass many years side by aide, fighting the battle of life together.
